

On June 2nd, I believe that anything less than maintaining the current rules will be a failure to our country.

In the case of media ownership in the United States, regulation is a necessary means for a competitive, diverse, and democratic end. Civic concerns cannot be dismissed in favor of economic gains for corporations. Allowing media concentration costs citizens both monetarily and civically. Allowing for this consolidation will be seen in future years as a definite point in turning our backs on the U.S. liberal political tradition and allowing our country to slip farther away from its ideals. Please do not let this happen.

Respectfully,
Catie Lindemann
